business largely depends on the impartial manner in which matters are done tial manner in which matters are done and the time given to it, and such is the crowning point of the one who holds a subordinate office, in a fraternal order. The State deputy brings cheering refrom Virginia and expects to s in active operation during the next month the new deputy system which he is now introducing in that State and also in the District of Columbia.

Good Templar Activities.

Perseverance Lodge No. 2, International Order of Good Templars, in session in old Masonic Temple, Saturday evening, had a large attendance of members and several visitors. Miss Josephene Johnson, chief templar, presided. Among the visitors were Ben D. Wright, national chief templar, a teacher and publicist of note in the order, resident of Lockport, New York, and Rev. E. C. Dinwiddle, local grand chief and national legislative superintendent. They were received with honors and invited to the platform.

The national templar made the principal address, giving a review of the prog-ress of the Good Templars, particularly during his thirty-five consecutive years of service: detailed to some extent a "plan of organization and method of work," of which he is author, and paid high religious of the property of the prohigh tribute to Mr. Dinwiddie, who has the distinctive honor of being elected legislative superintendent by unanimous vote, at every elective term since the National lodge was instituted.

By EARLE F. DORSEY. The War Department spoke to First Lieut. U. T. Winslett-Georgia National Guard, suh!-the other day. The War Department is not garrulous to Lieut. Winsiett, the militia officer, and when the War Department really speaks at infrequent intervals a little thrill of expectancy passes up Lieut. Winslett's spine. Some of the things the War Depart-ment has told Lieut. Winslett has caused that officer some trifling confucaused that officer some trifling confusion, and has caused him to buckle on his sword and ponder deeply over the grave utterance of the army powers at Washington, but nothing the department ever said to Winslett caused him half the confusion he was caused by the latest order.

This was the order:

"First Lieut. U. T. Winslett, Second Infantry, Georgia National Guard, is authorised to attend and pursue a course of instruction at the Army School for Bakers and Cooks, Washington will be the joillest and most interesting place in the United States on the Fourth of July.

"Here we teach the men how to cook and bake under all sorts of difficulties," the old-timer resumed. "It seems a funny thing to be teaching an officer in the United States army, but if we knew more about culinary science and less about military recedent, we'd end our campaigns quicker."

That was the way the old-timer summed army all three, particularly the first. Must Enforce Diet.

The officers of the army who are or-dered to the Washington Barracks for a course in domestic science come from al parts of the country. Every officer in the service is supposed to take a hand in the game of domestic science, and the lessons learned there must be enforced by the lieutenants and the captains, while the tacticians are planning their campaign of armament, acres and artillery.

On the Cooking School.

A clerk in the War Department, who was assigned to prepare the daily list of orders to army officers, took the message of the War Department to Lieut. Winslett and carelessly sandwiched it between two other orders, which authorized the dissolution of a retiring board and gave a recruiting officer leave of absence, respectively. Lieut. Winslett, however, hastily tore open the long official envelope of the War Department, read the massage with gathering consternation, and then went home and told his family he was going to learn cooking.

Lieut. Winslett packed up his grip with a book of army tactics under the lid and lieft for Washington.
